ADDING A SMALL SPRINKLING TO THE TINY EXISTING QUOTA OF PARADISE ON EARTH IN AN UNUSUAL CORNER OF SOUTH EAST ASIA

Another year, another mind-bogglingly stunning paradise island resort opening, you might think. But this one, Song Saa Private Island Resort opening in early 2012, promises to be different. For starters it's in Cambodia, the first of its kind to slip in amongst the otherwise untouched islands making up the lush Koh Rong archipelago (great if you're growing a little tired of trying to find a square foot of undiscovered Thailand). Secondly, it promises to put sustainability at the very heart of its operation without compromising a jot on luxury. The area is already a protected marine reserve harbouring hundreds of rare and exotic sea-life species and the development has adhered to the strictest environmental guidelines throughout. Twenty-seven villas will be built in sustainable materials reflecting the same structures traditionally used by neighbouring fishing villages, whilst the resort's kitchen will only draw on the most plentiful local ingredients. It all conjures a blissful image of conscience-free paradise-isle relaxation. 'Song Saa' is the original name of the island, meaning 'sweetheart', and on seeing this site we challenge you not to fall in love with it. Roll on 2012.
